A DATE WITH RODNEY...

Bon Voyage

by Gracie Allen

Well, George and I are going to London to play at the Palladium. We were over there 15 years ago when both George and Europe were in better shape.

George told me he had an awful time getting permission from the State Department for me to go abroad, because it was afraid that, considering the condition Europe is in, I might upset the balance of powder. But then I got the nicest farwell messages from President Truman and Secretary Acheson, and if they hadn't come collect I would never have suspected Jack Benny.

The papers in Los Angeles were very nice to me about my trip. I felt too bad the headline in one got mixed up so that it read:

"Gracie Allen Going To Europe; 25 Traffic Cops Get Leave Of Absence."

NEW YORK.—Spent most of the day with George at a bank where he got his travelers' checks. He finally decided to take along a hundred dollars worth, which he explained was just in case of emergency and was not any reason for me to go overboard. I have no intention of going overboard, as I am not Esther Williams.

George said that English money is different from ours, so he would have to change our dollars into pounds. Maybe if I can persuade him that it will reduce his waistline I can take a few pounds off him.

George said the English are suffering from a dollar shortage caused by the war, (in my case it was marriage), so whenever they find an American dollar roaming around they latch onto it and won't let go. Well, George is exactly that way himself, and I think he will be a match for the English even on their home grounds.

ATLANTIC OCEAN, AMERICAN SIDE.—Well, we are all on board the Queen Elizabeth at last and on our way to Europe. They have named this boat after England's famous queen, which I suppose is a nice compliment, except if I were a queen, I wouldn't want anything as big and broad in the beam to be named after me.

I've made George hide his Hawaiian shirt, and dress for dinner. Because I'm told if you're at all conspicuous or naughty you have to eat at the Captain's table, where he can keep an eye on you.

Personally, I think this is very high-handed when you've paid for your ticket and all, but then the Captain on a boat is very powerful. As I said to George, he can marry you, and put you in irons, and George said, why do you have to repeat yourself?

ATLANTIC OCEAN, NEAR THE MIDDLE.—Of course, I don't know much about boats, but our Queen Elizabeth must be one of the best. Here we are nearly halfway to England, and the Captain hasn't had to order the sailors to put up the sails yet.

We've been having quite a few waves, and everyone's feeling a little funny around the tummy. Everyone, that is, except my husband George, who said he felt wonderful and was nice enough to say he owed it to my mother. He said anyone who's spent any time around her isn't going to let a little thing like the Atlantic Ocean get him down.

This morning I woke George out of a sound sleep just before daylight to tell him I was positive I had left the gas on in the oven at home. He said to go back to sleep; he would have the captain turn the boat around first thing in the morning.

I've never known him, to be so obliging and considerate. It must be that big full moon that's responsible. It's like a second honeymoon.

SOUTHAMPTON.—I was certainly surprised, on landing here, to learn we had to get off our ship to take the train to London. I asked George why he didn't buy the right tickets in the first place, and he said they don't allow ocean liners in London, especially at the Savoy Hotel where we're stopping.

Then George advised us "while in Rome, do as the Romans do," and I said, "Goody! I didn't know we were going to Rome, too." He said we weren't going to Rome, and it turned out he hadn't the slightest idea what the Romans do anyway, and he kept shouting hoarsely that what he said about them was just an expression I finally had to put him to bed with an icepack. Yet men say they are the logical sex!

"NOW IF HE PROPOSES, DON'T SAY YOU'LL THINK IT OVER...REMEMBER THAT GIVES HIM TIME TO THINK IT OVER, TOO!"

SOME PUNKINS?

I was rather hoping the king or queen might run down and meet us, but George said they were probably tied up at the palace. I said I'd like to see the palace and he said the only difference between getting into the one in New York and the one in London was just a lot of influence. I guess he's right. If it hadn't been for an uncle of mine in a booking office, we probably never would have played the New York Palace at all.

LONDON.—Here at last! The home of Sherlock Holmes, Dickens, and the airplane company that takes you to the style shows in Paris.

London's such a beautiful city! Of course, the bombings have left their marks but not quite as many as the American G.I.'s during their stay here. Dear me, it looks as though the "Kilroy was here" inscriptions will still be found long after London Bridge has finally fallen down.

I'm afraid our soldier boys affected some of the Londoner's speech, too. George asked a London Bobby—that's a policeman—how to get to the Tower of London and he answered: "O.K., Mac, yuh toin to d' left, and mosey four blocks and yuh kin spot d' joint, podner!"

Goodness knows why they call the policemen here "bobbies." I checked their socks personally, and they all wear long black woolen socks with cute little pink garters.

LONDON.—We had dinner last night with a very pleasant Englishman who explained why so many of his people who had visited the United States came back and wrote pieces for the papers criticizing our habits. He said the reason they were so jittery was because, after being told that America was their island, so many Americans kept popping up and putting ice in their drinks.

He said that Britons weren't afraid of the atomic bomb or anything else except the coming of a second ice age. Then he told us how his family had bought a mechanical refrigerator and had all kinds of trouble with it because it kept things so cold until someone thought of disconnecting it. But why couldn't the salesman have told them that in the first place?

This Englishman said it was too bad the Americans kept icing the friendship between the two countries, just when the British were getting over feeling bitter about the Boston Tea Party since they'd learned that was only our way of getting rid of surplus crops.

LONDON.—It's certainly hard to be socially correct here in London, as there are so many titles running around. In America you can just call a man "colonel" or "sir" or "mac" and be all right. But the visitor to the British Capital hears people being called "your lordship" here and "Sir Alfred" there, and "Your worship" here and "old thing" there.

I am told that the King of England gives a title when anybody has done something noteworthy. So it is much easier to get one from him than from our president, who gives a title only when a political writer has said something.

I said to George, "I wish you could be made a duke, dear, because then I could call you 'your grace' and you could call me your Gracie" wouldn't that be cute?

I've been reading about a lot of excitement because an elephant has been expecting the stork at sea. But goodness, it would be a lot more exciting if the stork were expecting the elephant.

LONDON.—I do hope Errol Flynn won't feel too hurt, but the biggest thrill they've had here in England for some time is news of the romance of our Vice President, Alben Barkley. The newspapers are full of it and older bachelor gentlemen, who naively thought they had reached a safe age, are barring their doors again and staying off the streets after dark. And attractive widow ladies with glimmers in their eyes are beginning to run thicker than salmon off Oregon.

Personally, I think every lone male is a walking affront to the feminine sex, and I am returning to America immediately to lend a hand in throwing the net over Mr. Barkley before he gets another democratic administration older. Believe me, if all we women cooperated and helped one another to land our man, we'd soon make the unattached man as extinct as the buffalo.

Come on, Mr. Barkley, all you have to look forward to now is flying around the country, telling funny jokes, going to parties and meeting glibulous people, and coming home any time in the morning you feel like. It's kind of life is that for a man? It's time you stopped enjoying yourself and got married.

That's all in the line of comments from this side of the Atlantic for now. I'll sign off until I catch my breath and give George a chance to take the cotton out of his ears. — Gracie
